

What city has the most coffee shops in the world?

2-2 minutes

1. London

Aussies and Kiwis opened the city's first espresso-focused coffee shops a decade ago and they've been popping up across the city ever since.

2. Melbourne

"The coffee culture in Melbourne is just incredible," says reigning World Barista Champion Pete Licata, from the United States. Coffee is such an integral part of the Melbourne lifestyle that the city even hosts an annual coffee expo.

3. Reykjavik, Iceland

Scandinavians drink more coffee per head than anyone else.

4. Rome

Coffee is so much a part of Italian culture that you'll rarely encounter a local who doesn't drink it. But believe it or not, it's not always that easy to find a decent espresso in Italy, with critics whispering that Italians have been resistant to adopt modern barista techniques.

5. Singapore

Where coffee art is as important as the taste.

6. Seattle

If there's one American city that's consistently ahead of the game, it's Seattle.

7. Vienna, Austria

Fixations on cake have turned to coffee.

8. Wellington, New Zealand

While the ubiquitous flat white was purportedly invented in Sydney, the drink was perfected in Wellington, where it's become the nation's unofficial national beverage.

"Wellington-ites really know their coffee, and there is a very high standard being served around the city, Wellington is also a small city; there's a lot of interaction between consumers and professionals, which helps our industry to improve and grow."
